Enjoy!Federal judge blocked Texas and Louisiana from enforcing abortion laws including waiting periods and prohibitions on abortion clinics from admitting women seeking the procedure, the Chronicle reported. A federal judge blocked enforcement of the laws as the administration of President Donald Trump seeks to follow through on his campaign promise of banning abortion. There are currently more than 40 other states that regulate abortion in some way. Many also include provisions requiring a 48-hour waiting period and a provider to notify women of the availability of abortion services. But U.S. District Judge Norma H. Johnson, based in San Antonio, said the Louisiana and Texas laws represented a “clear and impermissible attempt to'shame women into silence' regarding their constitutionally protected right to abortion." She issued a preliminary injunction blocking the laws nationwide, the Chronicle reported. “The government has no business imposing regulations that tell a woman whether to proceed with or against her decision that she is personally, emotionally, and financially ready to parent,” U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions said in a statement. The U.S. Department of Justice argued that the laws would force abortion providers to choose between being forced to leave the state or face criminal charges, prohibiting them from performing
