rar and a bit of a law. -transcript 07f9cb05b1:10:22:55 : 55 : 00 : 55 it's th enow. so let me ask you a question. if you did all of your keystrokes on a keyboard, right? then go to the browser, go to google, hit the keys again, then find one of the sites that can replace them for you, then it's gonna tell you to type your email address in. all right? s o fast forward a couple days or a week or a few weeks or a couple months. you get an email with a link to click on to download that would work. so let's say you wanted to do something similar with this. but when you do, you find out, oh, hey, the credit card's not valid anymore. you find that out later. it is gone. so you're lucky, but then, in a real world example, you do this and now your credit card's maxed out and you have no way to pay for this. all right? so this is what you're gonna see. this is a windows security feature called "kiosk mode". >> >> Yeah. >> >> I've never seen that feature before. >> Yes, well, thank you very much. >> >> No problem. >> >> This is a nice feature, but what is it? >> >> I think it's nice because it's a way to lock down your computer to the software you're running. if you can't, it's like your computer is locked down to what you're doing. but there are a lot of security holes in windows and this is one of them. so, a lot of people use this with a monitor, so their monitor has a keyboard and mouse, and a lot of software is designed to run only on the keyboard and mouse and not all the other stuff that you might have running on your computer. >> >> That's right. >> >> >> I'm not familiar with that, though. >> >> I've only ever used the Google Chrome extension before, I've never used a browser extension before. >> >> Yeah. >>
