Concurrent analysis of Pectinatus frisingensis, Flavobacterium odoratum, and Flavobacterium liquefaciens by targeting conserved single-nucleotide polymorphisms. The increasing demand for more rapid, cost-effective, and accurate detection of microorganisms has led to the development of new techniques. Conventional identification methods of these bacteria are long, laborious, time consuming, and inaccurate. Many studies have reported the use of single-nucleotide polymorphism (SNP) analysis to identify bacteria in a time frame shorter than that of other methods. The use of an identified SNP has led to the development of real-time PCR and LAMP assays. In this study, three SNPs were identified as being specific for the species of interest. These SNPs were located in the coding regions of the 16S rRNA, rpoD, and mreB genes. The criteria for detecting the presence of the bacteria in a sample were obtained from the values of the critical cutoff (CCT) of the three SNPs in the sample. DNA samples taken from the surrounding water of an oil production well were used to test the specificity and sensitivity of each SNP. The test results showed that all three SNPs were specific for the bacterium Flavobacterium liquefaciens, Flavobacterium odoratum, and Pectinatus frisingensis. The R-square values for the combinations of SNPs F. liquefaciens/F. odoratum and P. frisingensis/F. odoratum reached 0.996. The ratio of P. frisingensis to F. odoratum in the sample was close to 1:1. Therefore, these
