Antigenicity
of Mycobacterium kansasii in sera from persons infected with M. kansasii and from healthy, tuberculinpositive individuals.

Immunoblotting revealed that sera from 19 of 20 patients with mycobacterial infections caused by Mycobacterium kansasii had antibodies to various antigens of the bacteria as compared with sera from 22 of 52 healthy, tuberculin-positive individuals. The antigenic pattern in patients with active disease was more complex than in those with latent infection. There was no difference in the rate of antibody response to antigens of M. kansasii among patients with pulmonary and

extrapulmonary infections.
Antibodies directed against antigen-85 were detected more often in patients with

extrapulmonary
mycobacterial diseases than in tuberculin-positive individuals. No difference in the antibody response to such antigens was found among patients with

mycobacterial diseases. The rate of antibody response to one of the antigens did not correlate with the degree of immunodeficiency. Callum
