The purpose of the present study was to evaluate the prognostic significance of cardiac function and hemodynamics in chronic heart failure (CHF) patients enrolled in the Val-HeFT (Valsartan Heart Failure Trial) study. The treatment of CHF has become more complex with the increasing utilization of device-based therapies to manage cardiac function and symptoms. More sophisticated clinical trials such as the Val-HeFT trial have sought to define the contribution of treatment in this setting. However, to date, there has been a paucity of data relating to the prognostic impact of cardiac function and hemodynamics in the contemporary, treated patient.
