I am trying to find the total number of times unique keys appear in the array. The way I am calculating right now it takes into account both the duplicate keys. My question is if there is a way to only take into account the unique keys without getting an array of array? Basically, if I have an array as so var str = "Jack, Mike, Tom, John, Jim"; I want to sum the number of times the values repeat. So that would be 3. Thanks in advance A: var values = str.split(','), duplicates = { }; for (var i = 0, l = values.length; i < l; i++) { if (values[i] in duplicates) duplicates[values[i]]++; else duplicates[values[i]] = 1; } console.log(duplicates);

Field of the Invention This invention relates to a process for the preparation of 2-chloro-4,6-dinitrobenzenesulfonic acid, a derivative of 2,4-dinitrobenzenesulfonic acid. 2. The Prior Art 2-Chloro-4,6-dinitrobenzenesulfonic acid is an intermediate in the preparation of certain herbicides, for example aminomethylphosphonic acid, a well-known acetanilide herbicide. 2-Chloro-4,6-dinitrobenzenesulfonic acid may be obtained by a process comprising the treatment of 2,4-dinitrobenzenesulfonic acid with hydrogen peroxide in

KEYMACRO is a very handy macro recorder tool, which records all actions performed on your keyboard. That means it can record not only your keystrokes, but also mouse clicks and other actions related to your PC. KEYMACRO allows you to record up to 30 days of data. The tool can be set to keep only keyboard presses, but also records mouse actions. That's what makes it an essential software for those who often work on computers and have a lot of "junk" data on their hard drive. One of the reasons KEYMACRO is such a handy tool is the quality of the macros recorded. After you record a keystroke, you can make a few simple operations on it. That means you can alter a button action, click a specific mouse button or open a document. To make that, you only have to choose the buttons you want to operate and then hit the RECORD button. KEYMACRO lets you record macros from more than 100 different applications. Some of them include Internet Explorer, Microsoft Word, Microsoft Excel and OpenOffice.org. The most important feature of the tool is a timer – after a specific amount of time is over, the program automatically records the actions performed and saves the data to the specified folder. In the directory, you can save all recorded files including macros, mouse clicks and keystrokes. What's more, KEYMACRO records all actions executed on your computer – your mouse, browser, documents, etc. The program can be set to record only mouse clicks, web browser actions or actions performed on specific files, web sites or programs. That means if you use a lot of programs and want to save their actions, you can use a single macro to record everything. Macros are saved in the "Macros" folder located in the root folder. When you open this folder, you can see all the recorded macros. It is possible to select one and then use it in other programs. When you open an application, you can record the actions performed on it and then execute them in KEYMACRO. If a button on the program is pressed, the keystroke is recorded in the macro. If the mouse button is pressed, the mouse click is recorded. If you're working with a particular program, it is enough to open the folder with the recorded data. It will be automatically loaded to your program. The supported operating system includes Windows 98, Windows 2000, Windows ME, 1d6a3396d6
