Calama lies in the west of the department on the banks of the Aguan River, and is served by the Siglo XX Airport. Calama and the surrounding area was extensively damaged during the 2009 Honduras earthquake on September 16, 2009, which had a magnitude of 8.0 on the moment magnitude scale. History The town is located at the intersection of the road between Tegucigalpa and La Ceiba, the second-largest city in Honduras, and the road between Tegucigalpa and La Esperanza in the department of El Paraíso. It is named after the large number of indigenous people who built the first houses in the area. In 1837, the town was called San Pedro de los Pueblos. On September 16, 2009, Calama was the epicenter of the largest seismic activity ever recorded in Honduras. It is believed that the seismic motion responsible for the damage to the city occurred at 7:14 AM Central Time. Experts say that Calama's earthquake was at least eight times larger than that of the 1985 Mexico City quake. The earthquake created a seismic water wave that destroyed over 500 houses in several sections of the city, mostly along the river. The 2,500 residents of Calama took refuge in a local stadium, where they were later moved to the Aguan River's shores. The day after, the United Nations sent a helicopter with food for the remaining residents of the city. The US government also supported the effort, sending medical supplies to the city. Geography Calama lies west of the department of Ocotepeque, and is located at an altitude of 950 meters. It borders the department of El Paraíso to the west, and the municipality of Las Chacras in the department of San Pedro Sula to the east. The

Q: Best practice to follow during acceptance phase of a REST API When working on the acceptance phase of a REST API, do you follow the same set of procedures for acceptance testing of a web application to which it will be integrated? A: I would argue against that. You're much better off pushing the boundaries of what you believe is possible within the system before you start to get into the weeds of writing tests. Those tests will become too brittle and testing the implementation itself will make the tests look more like unit tests. This practice is one of the key benefits to my understanding of doing API first design - creating a separate API implementation up front in order to be able to test all of the possible responses to various inputs. Q: How do you prevent wildcard subdomains from being routed? I'm having an issue with wildcard subdomains. So, www.mydomain.com should route to I have this working, however, I want to also have www.mydomain.com/shop/* routed to (which are redirected to my application) and www.mydomain.com/application/* to (which are redirected to a different application). Currently, I'm using the following: Options +FollowSymLinks RewriteEngine on RewriteCond %{HTTP_HOST} ^www.mydomain.com [NC] RewriteRule ^(.)$ [R,L] This works to route the wildcard URIs to my application, however, it routes the subdomain URIs (to my application. I've tried: RewriteCond %{HTTP_HOST} ^www.mydomain.com [NC] RewriteRule ^(.)$ /index.php [R,L] with no luck. I've seen various solutions: RewriteCond %{HTTP_HOST}!^www.mydomain.com [NC] but have not been able to get this to work either. I know what the solution is, I'm just having
