The first thing that strikes me with this gun is the price. $80 is simply nuts and the fact that it comes with a variety of different grips and a few extra front sights is nice, but the grip is a misnomer and its wimpy front sight with a scope mounted is not good for precision shooting. The main thing that stops me from being able to recommend this gun to any new shooter is the fact that its magazine is not detachable, unlike the one found on the CZ 1875. This means that you have to carry more ammunition than with a detachable magazine, and unless you plan to fill the magazines every third shot, you will run out of ammo fast. When I tried to remove the magazine, I found that it is locked by some screws on the bottom. When I removed the screws, the magazine came out easily, as was the case with the CZ 1875, but that is where my experiments with this gun ended. The grip, as I said before, is not good. I would've thought that a Glock 21, with one of the least expensive grips on the market, could be squeezed

In the case of the Falcon 9 rocket he just fired for the first time, he might have been furthering that claim — or at least trying to. SpaceX's rocket-landing system — known as Grasshopper — consisted of six counterweights that fired a single rocket into the air. But one of those rockets veered off course and went out of control, 3da54e8ca3
