There's no exact date when the two sides will meet to discuss issues facing Detroit's $18 billion debt, but the pairing was announced Jan. 11 at City Hall by Detroit Mayor Mike Duggan, with the fate of the city's public health and safety departments among the agenda items. Duggan is offering free legal services and at least one half-time laborer in-house to help resolve the city's shortfalls. Under the agreement, the city won't ask current retirees for more money until the next round of the millage. That could happen as soon as next summer. In a statement Tuesday, Duggan said the private
