A master image (s)he created (s)he can start editing in with Photoshop. Choose Edit>Photoshop Elements>Open or drag the photo to the program icon to open a new Photoshop window. If the photo you wish to edit is already in Photoshop Elements, however, you can simply select Edit>Photoshop Elements>Open or drag the photo to the Edit icon and it opens up as a new Photoshop file. Photoshop enables you to add media to either an existing or a new image. The photo can be added as a new layer on top of the existing image, or you can choose File>Place to pull the photo from a file. The newer versions of Photoshop CS6 and Elements now also have the option to add photos and other content from the web directly to a file through the built-in browser or sidecar. Layer functions Photoshop has a layer-based editing system that enables you to change the pixels on a photo, regardless of whether you're creating a new layer or adding a new layer over an existing image. Most of the editing functions that you can perform in Photoshop Elements are available in Photoshop. For example, if you have a photo of a brick wall with a brick pattern in the mortar, you can create a new layer and edit the brick and mortar pattern on it. Later, you can apply the layer to the background of your image and see a completely new image. If you create a layer, you can edit and create your own layer styles in the Layers panel. Layers give you better control over your layers — you can merge them, delete them, or change the blend mode (which is covered in Chapter 5). Adding a background image You can use an image as a background image and then create a layer for your photo on top of the background image. When you do this, you can add multiple layers to create an image with several different components. For example, you can have a photo on top of a background image with decorative elements on top of the photo. The photo's pixels are transparent, so the decorative elements (for example, a frame) show through. This way of working with layers is common in both Photoshop and Photoshop Elements. Here are the steps to add an image as a background: 1. In Photoshop or Photoshop Elements, choose File>Place to pull in the image. 2. After placing the image, a dialog box opens and asks whether to place the image in

I heard about this incident last week. Only two of us were driving the speed limit, but I'm sure it seems like it was a bit insane since in the city we live we have all this speed traps so I'm sure they think we were all doing in excess of the limit. But even with all the speed traps people still get in accidents. We were riding in my friend's car and we noticed a couple of red lights. So we quickly pulled off the road to see if we could stop. Unfortunately the other driver was very inexperienced and a lot faster and besides a slight accident there was a ton of damage to her car. We tried telling her that she was in too much of a hurry and if she had just slowed down she wouldn't have hit us. But I really think that was just an excuse and she was just as worried about our safety as we were. We were driving home from my friend's house and my friend was driving. At a really busy intersection we saw a bus just coming out of a stop sign and heading towards us so we began braking and moving out of its way as best as we could. We saw the bus approaching the stop and it didn't quite make it and just rolled to a stop right in front of us and stopped a few inches in front of the car in front of us. I don't think the bus driver even looked at us. He just stood there shaking his head. It was just annoying. Have you seen some of the map software packages in the app store? If you are in your car and get lost and you have the device with you you can pull up a map. You can scroll through the roads and you can zoom in so you can see what direction you need to go. When I was in high school I liked walking around the city with my friends. One of my friends was a bit of a daredevil and would get in these giant "jumping" contests. So one day we all decided to go out and jump over all the fences and walls we could find. We spent some time looking at a few of the buildings downtown. And then someone mentioned that there was this huge chain link fence that went down the street. So my friend decided to jump that. We were all cheering and were waiting for him to jump and when he hit the ground we cheered and did a little leap. But when he hit the ground he found himself in a pile of shit. He couldn't figure out how
